

SOCIETY'S DOINGS

Dances.

The weekly military hop will be given tonight at Fort Bliss. The officers and women of the sixth infantry will act as hosts for the event and the sixth infantry band will furnish the music.

The annual labor union ball was given Monday night at Ryan's hall. There were 100 couples on the floor. The ball was a decided success in every way. A six piece orchestra rendered delightful music. Refreshments of fruit punch, lemonade and cakes were served. The women's auxiliary to the Carpenters' union had a flower booth in charge of Miss Virginia R. Standish, assisted by Mrs. J. W. Ramey. Contributions were in evidence all the evening, so successful was Miss Standish in disposing of her wares. The committee on arrangements and to whom the greater part of the success of the ball is due was composed of: Teddy, ball-hold, chairman, assisted by Victor, A. Lee, R. M. Peckham, H. M. Moody and E. C. Skinner. The door was in charge of J. W. Ramey and the refreshments were in charge of Frank Curtis.

Miss Ruth Hill of Los Angeles was the honored guest Monday evening at a house dance given by Miss Mary Crawford, whom she is visiting. The rooms were decked with vases and bowls of cut flowers while the porch and grounds were lighted with Japanese lanterns, and proved a pleasant addition to the affair. Fruit punch was served between dances and an ice cream was also an enjoyable feature. Those present were: Misses Elizabeth Kelly, Marion Moser, Miss Kelly, Cleo Russell, Anne Magaffin, Birdie Krupp, Dorothy Williams, Clara Hawkins, Jane Burges, Katherine Dick, Mary Caples, Winnie Alms, Messrs. William Rice, Willard Krausner, Roland Kemp, J. A. Happer, William Flato, Edward Simmons, Leonard Goodman, Charles Westcott, Irwin Schwartz, Jack Thompson, Gardner Hawkins, John Crockett, Joe Macaffin, H. Simmons, Werner Mueller, Robert Wolf.

Musical.

Miss Virginia Burk gave a song recital Monday night at the Trinity Methodist church. She was assisted by Mrs. Ralph M. Henderson, violinist, and Edwin C. Knickmeyer, at the piano. Miss Burk has a very sweet voice and was heard with pleasure. Mrs. Henderson is a stranger in the city and her first appearance was well received. Miss Burk's program shows her to be a versatile singer. Her first group was composed of "When the Swallows Homebound Fly," "A Memory," and "Let Us Praise Thee." The second group included "I Hear You Calling," by Marshall, "The Rosary," by Noeline, "Where My Caravan Has Rested," by Lohr, and "Love and the World is Mine," by Stross. The third group was composed of "La Cusilla," a song by Stross, "The Song of the Bloom," by Reishardt, and "Yesterday and Today," by Stross. In the last group were "Joyous," by Lohr, "Godard," "O Dry Those Tears," by Del Riego. In the latter number Miss Burk was accompanied by both the violin and pipe organs. Mrs. Henderson sang "Cantata," by Stross and Mrs. Knickmeyer sang the "Second Nocturne," by Liszt, and "The March of the Dwarfs," by Greig.

FEELS LIKE A NEW WOMAN

As Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Dispelled Backache, Headaches and Dizziness.

Piqua, Ohio.—"I would be very ungrateful if I failed to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound the praise it deserves, for I have taken it at different times and it always relieved me when other medicines failed, and when I hear a woman complain I always recommend it. Last winter I was attacked with a severe case of organic weakness. I had backache, pains in my hips and over my kidneys, headache, dizziness, lassitude, had no energy, limbs ached and I was always tired. I was always able to do my housework. I had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound on one other occasion, and it had helped me so I took it again and it has built me up, until now I feel like a new woman. You have my hearty consent to use my name and testimonial in any way and I hope it will benefit suffering women."—Mrs. ORPHEA TURNER, 431 S. Wayne St., Piqua, Ohio.

Women who are suffering from those distressing ills peculiar to their sex should not doubt the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health. If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

Constance Decides to Leave the Home of Her Uncle, John Hale.

By Virginia Terhune Van de Water.

A MAN may have a quick temper, but his ability to control it depends largely on his physical and nervous state. That which he would regard at one time as a mere annoyance will at another time cause him to give vent to sudden passion. While John Hale had a hot temper, he usually had no trouble in concealing any undue manifestation of its existence.

This morning, however, the case was different. Anxiety, a restless night, a disagreeable surprise, had contributed to put him in a condition where Constance's words had the power to make him very nearly forget the fact that he was a gentleman and that this girl was under his roof.

His wife, seeing the light of anger leap to his eyes, noting the sudden clenching of his hands and the stiffening of his muscles at his mouth and chin, knew that a storm was not only brewing, but was about to break. With a hasty command to her daughter and Ralph to come with her, she retreated with as much haste as was consistent with dignity, leaving what she thought of as "this horrible scene" to be settled by her husband and her niece.

She was the more willing to do this as she found herself all at once incensed by Constance's attitude. She had tried to plead kindly with the girl and had met with no response. How could she know that Constance's self imposed penance and that had she allowed herself to reply to her aunt her composure would have vanished to leave room for John Hale's maternal love was wounded by Constance's manner to ward Edith and Ralph's behavior. These facts made her feel justified in retreating from the scene of conflict.

The door had hardly closed behind Ralph, who had stood aside to let the women to pass out before him, when Constance spoke, her tone so humble, so low, so pleading, that in contrast to the voice in which she had rebuffed Ralph's reply to her vehement demand.

"Constance begs Uncle's pardon," she said, "for speaking in your presence as I did last night. I don't know how angry—yet you know it was not at all."

There was no responsive softness in John Hale's reply. On the contrary, his voice was sharp and rasping. He was intensely angry and he did not intend to let the object of his wrath know it.

"I am not all sure that I will accept your apology," he retorted. "I am so much displeased with you that I cannot talk to you or think of you with any patience. You have carried about your own affairs with me, and when your cousin was engaged, have insulted my child, have forgotten your duty to your aunt and me by bursting into a race against me, and by behaving in such a manner that unless you are an idiot, I see no excuse in the world for you."

The girl at whom he addressed this tirade was so much to be stung. Her silence flamed his wrath. When one receives no reply to violent accusations one is conscious of a maddening sense of impotence, like that which he felt with Constance.

"Have you nothing to say?" queried the incensed man.

"Only to beg your pardon, sir, for my seeming ingratitude. I do not mean to offend you. I am sure you are right, but I am so much displeased with you that I cannot talk to you or think of you with any patience. You have carried about your own affairs with me, and when your cousin was engaged, have insulted my child, have forgotten your duty to your aunt and me by bursting into a race against me, and by behaving in such a manner that unless you are an idiot, I see no excuse in the world for you."

"Who's asking for gratitude?" stormed John Hale. "Don't dare suggest to me that I am looking for thanks from you. I have never thought of you, and I don't expect them. But I do want you to explain to me your course lately. I do want you to tell me that the things which I have been told about you which please me, and which I did not believe until I had to be false. Can you deny them?"

He had not reckoned on the resentment of injustice in the breast of his opponent—for this is the worst for the moment he felt her to be—and he started with surprise at her reply.

"Reply Auntie's Angry Uncle," she said, "I do not propose to do so, but I can believe me capable of the things of which you accuse me, nothing I might say could make any difference."

She faced him proudly for an instant, unflinching under his stern gaze. Then she spoke of her own accord.

"Even if I cannot say what you wish, I must say once more that I am grateful to you and am sure that all that you have said to me since I came here, is only fair to you both—and to Edith—that I do not stay here any longer, and I don't expect them to tell you—so I want you to know that I am going away today. I am aware," hesitatingly, "that I am much in your debt—financially, I mean—for you have never allowed me to pay for my board and lodging. What I owe you for many kindnesses can never be repaid, but I am going to do so to refund you for—other things."

"This is sheer madness and wicked temper on your part, Constance," the man began. She stopped him with an uplifted hand.

"I do not wish," she said wearily, "to talk any longer about this matter. Will you explain it all to aunt for me—please?"

"Don't make a fool of yourself, girl!" he blustered. But without waiting to hear anything more she went quickly from the room, closing the door behind her.

John Hale dropped into his deck chair and, leaning back, closed his eyes. He felt shaken and quivering. "I haven't let myself get as angry as that for years," he murmured. And all for a girl, a girl! She won't leave us—she's too smart to quarrel with her head and better yet awhile."

Being a man, he did not understand feminine psychology, so he could hardly be expected to know that Constance had already packed her trunk, leaving in the jewelry and bureau drawers all of the jewelry and clothing that the Hales had given her and taking with her only the articles with which she had come to their home.

At 12 o'clock, when Mrs. Hale and Edith had gone out for an hour's drive before luncheon to "quiet their nerves," Constance summoned a cab from the jewelry stable and had herself and her luggage carried to the railroad station.

But she left behind, on her aunt's dressing table, a little note of apology and a letter to her aunt, in reading it, a dignified grief and agitation—that it contained no farewell message for "poor Edith."

PIONEERS WILL BUILD HANDSOME CLUB HOUSE

Within the next few days a meeting of the members of the El Paso Pioneers' association will be held for the purpose of completing plans for the erection of a club house on the site donated by Juan Hart which adjoins Hart's mill, west of the city.

The club house will be built during the winter and the pioneers will be in their new home by the middle of summer, according to the present plans.

Tentative plans for the club house have been drawn. It will be one of the most handsome club houses in the west, having a large veranda running around it which will afford an excellent view overlooking the winding river, Mexico and the city of El Paso.

The site of the club is on a terrace above the quiet old mill. The grounds will be beautified and a garden opened around the large trees where luncheons and social events can be held during the summer months.

EARTH SLIDE CARRIES MAN INTO POOL; HE IS DROWNED

Breckenridge, Colo., Sept. 6.—Caught in a sudden slide of earth, William Goodwin, 19, a shoreman employed by the Tonopah & Tidewater company on Blue river, four miles north of here, was carried Monday to the bottom of a 50 foot pool and drowned. No one saw the accident. Goodwin was missed later but it was supposed he had walked farther up the river. Two hours later the lower half of Goodwin's body was brought to the surface in the above of the big steam dredge operated by the crew. The remainder of the body was recovered later with the aid of grappling hooks.

Mrs. Tabby Has a Birthday

© FREE - BY FLORENCE E. YODER.

"I HAVE the best plan you ever heard about," said Tottie Tabby one morning as the children all sat out in the yard of the Tabby house. She whispered it to Tense, her kitty sister, with a great air of secrecy, but that young lady just laughed at her.

"Tom, Ted," she called, "just listen. Tottie says she has a plan for a surprise—wonder what it is. Tottie's birthday is coming."

"The other kitties laughed with her. Tottie said that she was always getting up plans and making schemes that came to nothing."

But this time she really had a good one, and when she whispered it to Tense, who was very much interested, she said: "Tense, tell me what she had it in mind for her birthday."

At last Tottie really had thought of something," she whispered to the boys. "Today is mother's birthday, and she wants to give her a cake and a party. Now that was a very smart idea, but Tense objected at once. 'We don't want anyone but the family this time,' she said, sharply. 'If we can't do things it's time we learned. I simply won't have any outsiders in the house today.'"

Tense looked so sad and solemn as she said this that Tottie could have sworn she was crying. Tense was just a stray, and she had unknowingly hurt him. Tense looked into her lap and knew that something was up, and finally blurted out: "Of course, with just Ted and Tom, and Tense and Binkie there will be the family."

She smiled at Tense as she spoke and the look chased away from her face, and the little trickles of her forehead disappeared. "What shall each one of us do? How can we make a cake without getting caught at it, and what shall else be?" she said, looking up at the questions which began to crop up.

Mrs. Tabby saw them from the house and knew that something was up, and she tried not to think what it was. So she came out and said that she was going to Grandmother Tabby's to spend the rest of the day. That was just what the kitties wanted, and they saw her off with great alacrity. They worked all of the afternoon, baked a cake, cleaned their clothes, and even had time to run down to the little shop and buy a present or two. Tom got a lovely cap and sweater, and Ted bought a pitcher (they did not want to keep her eyes to herself until supper time, when she came back, everything was ready.)

When she came up the walk they could scarcely keep from telling her immediately and she, near as usual, Tottie and Tense in looking at the cake with the candles on it. But she managed to keep her eyes to herself until supper time. At last the table was ready, the cake on it, and the party ready. Somehow or other there did not seem to be as much to eat as there was when Mrs. Tabby got supper, and the kitties were first and nervous Mrs. Tabby was very pleased and surprised, but she could scarcely keep from helping her kitty boys and girls. When they cut the cake and ate it, Tense knew that she had forgotten to put the soda in—and she had used four milk! Then Tom could not wait and rushed away and rushed back with his cup and saucer, but just before he got to Mrs. Tabby he fell and broke it.

Then there were many tears and sobs, and the failure of the cake made Tense cry. Mrs. Tabby let them do as they pleased long enough. "Do you all wish to know what would be the best present in the world? Tense and Tom stopped crying, and Ted looked up from the floor where he had stooped to pick up the pieces of broken cup. "Yes—we would like anything," Tense said. "Way, I would like nothing better than to get some nice bread and milk for five kids, and then sit out on the porch. But she didn't have to argue. They all drew sighs of relief, and ate every speck of the bread and milk, and then all looked turns at being the one to sit in her lap and hear stories afterwards."

Her party turned out happily, after all—at least she thought so, for she said so, and pray, who else was there to disagree?"
